

The Penguin Who Learned to Be Brave

A Children's Story

A brave little penguin wanted to build the biggest, best treehouse in the whole forest.

But lifting the heavy branches was too hard to do alone.

A strong beaver came by. 'Need some help? I am good at building!'

A sparrow offered to fetch nails and string from the workshop in the tree.

A squirrel climbed to the highest branches to tie the ropes.

A mole dug a safe, sturdy hole for the ladder to sit in.

Each animal had a different skill, and together they worked like magic.

Our friend directed the work, drawing plans and keeping everyone organized.

By sunset, the treehouse was finished — with a flag on top and a sign that said 'ALL WELCOME'.

They all sat inside, looking at the view and feeling proud of what they built.

Our friend thanked each helper. 'We could not have done this alone.'

They learned that teamwork makes big dreams come true, one small job at a time.
